

GOLF A REALLY ROYAL GAME

RULERS OF EUROPE WHO HAVE A FANCY FOR THE SPORT.

King Edward Plays Frequently and Keeps Three Private Courses—The Princess Patricia a Skilful Golfer—The King of Spain's New Liking for the Links.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—Not long ago the Prime Minister of England alluded to the game of golf as it was played when he was young. He said it was more of a pastime then and less of a business. Now people took it seriously, as they did everything else, and what was once a recreation had become hard work. It is certainly true that golf is now more than a gentle form of exercise; it is a scientific and difficult game which requires a steady hand, a keen eye and considerable patience.

Perhaps the fact that it was played in a careless, easygoing fashion for so many centuries is one of the reasons why it has always been a favorite recreation with royalty. Certain it is that the English monarchs since the early days of their history have indulged in the game.

Queen Catharine, first wife of the much married King Hal, wrote to Cardinal Wolsey that the King and his subjects were "busy with golf," which she described her heart as "being good to," for, said she, they "take it for pastime."

The ill-fated Mary Queen of Scots was another golfer, but as most of her golfing was done with Bowdler, it is possible she saw the advantages of golf links as a place for a nearly private interview as royalty could manage in those days. Anyway it was one of the accusations her enemies made against her that she played golf "in the fields beside Seton" with Bothwell just after Darnley's assassination, thus proving her indifference to the event and her interest in her assassin.

James V. of Scotland played constantly at Gosford, which is one of the loveliest places in that "holy land of golf," as East Lothian has been named.

James VI. of Scotland and I. of England took so much interest in the game that he appointed a royal clubmaker, one William Mayne, who "during all the days of his lifetime" was to make clubs for his Majesty's personal use.

To come to modern times, King Edward plays an excellent game and during his stay at Biarritz was a constant onlooker at the links when he did not play himself. Since his accession the royal golf course at Windsor has been immensely improved and some new bunkers judiciously introduced. The course, of nine holes, is now made more sporting, and commencing at the East Terrace extends by Adelaide Lodge, at the back of the Royal Kennels, for about two miles. King Edward has also two other private courses.

The Prince of Wales is a fair player, but he devotes very little time to it. The Princess never plays. However, the "Wales Nursery," as their children are sometimes described, are eager beginners. They have been having lessons for the last year in the ethics of the game and the young Princes Edward and Albert are most promising players, while Princess Mary, who always tries to imitate her brothers, is struggling hard to keep up with their golf records. All three children are often to be seen on the private course at Sandringham and use their specially designed clubs with quite remarkable accuracy and skill.

The Princess Royal (Duchess of Fife) and the Duke of Fife and their daughters, the Princesses Alexandra and Maud, are enthusiastic golfers and go daily to the links near their home at Brighton. They all took lessons from a well known professional player, as did also Princess Victoria, whose delicate health, however, prevents her playing very often.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught are the presidents of the Sunningdale Club. Their two daughters, the Princess Margaret (now Princess Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden) and Princess Patricia, both learned in Ireland during their sojourn there. The Princess Gustavus Adolphus plays very little now, but Princess Patricia, better known to her most intimate friends as Princess Pat, plays constantly and has a most excellent record. She drives a long, steady ball, and her stroke is like a man's in its vigorous skill. This charming Princess, who is as democratic as she is pretty, plays daily at the Sunningdale Club in a short checked skirt and coat and high boots. All the caddies adore Princess Pat, and they are tremendously proud of her scores. It is said that when the young King of Spain first saw this Princess playing golf he looked upon her with great favor, but fate and perhaps Princess Pat herself willed things otherwise.

Golf as a royal game is not confined to England nowadays. King Alfonso has begun to play during his first visit here and was immediately fired with enthusiasm, and has had links established in the grounds of his country palace. He is also planning to have a course in Madrid. He is a left-handed player. The young Queen of Spain has never cared for the game—she is not the athletic type of English girlhood, anyway—but since her life in Spain commenced she has taken it up, probably at the request of the King. However, she is still in the very first stages of a beginner.

The King and the Crown Prince of Greece are great golfers. The King drives a wonderful ball and the Crown Prince's strength is in his putting, so their matches are rather interesting and are almost daily.

Since King Haakon and Queen Maud have come to the Norwegian throne they have introduced golf as an exercise in Norway, and have links near the palace.

The Kaiser's affliction makes golf quite out of the question for him, but he is said to interest himself in the game to the extent of looking on some of the German Crown Prince's plays well and often.

There is a very fine golf course at Peterhof and here the harassed ruler of all the Russias sometimes seeks distraction from the cares of state in a game of golf, but as he is accompanied by guards and escorts with a full regiment stationed around the links he probably does not play with the same attention to the game, and is said to play in a more desultory fashion.

"STRAD" AND AMATI GONE.

Louis Kapp Has a Musician Arrested for Theft of Two Precious Violins.

Philip Gallina, 35 years old, a musician of 235 East Twenty-fourth street, was arrested last night for the larceny of a Stradivarius violin valued at $10,000 and an Amati valued at $2,000. The complainant was Louis Kapp, a music teacher of 303 Lexington avenue. Kapp says that the apartment at 127 West Twelfth street, where he was then living, was broken into in September. There was jewelry and money in sight, he says, but these were not noticed.

Detective Petrosino and two members of his staff arrested Gallina and found violins in his apartment that Kapp identified as his. Kapp says that the Stradivarius is dated 1787 and the Amati 1850. He said that Henri Wieniawski played on the Stradivarius when, along with Rubinstein, he made a tour of this country in 1872. Emil Sauer used the violin in 1896, according to Kapp, and wanted to buy it.

Kapp said that he had also been robbed of three bows recently, one of which he valued at $500.

E. P. BRYAN'S HOME ROBBED.

Property Worth $1,000 Taken from the Interborough President's Place.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 16.—Burglars made a $1,000 haul last night at the country home of Edwin P. Bryan, president of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company of New York. Mr. Bryan's house is on the Easton River road, between this city and Bound Brook.

Three attempts were made in the neighborhood last night. The first was at the home of Edward H. Radel, half a mile from the Bryan house. Mr. Radel, with his brother Andrew, built the trolley systems of Middlesex and Somerset counties, N. J. About 2 A. M. to-day he heard his dog barking and went downstairs to see him out to tackle the prowlers he supposed were outside. This morning he found his parlor window forced open and several rooms ransacked. About $100 worth of jewelry and an overcoat were missing. Mr. Radel believes the burglars were in the house when he went down to set the dog on them.

A short distance from the Radel house the burglars went into the home of C. C. Rawlings, a New York trust officer, but got nothing of value.

From there they went to the Bryan house and went through every room, even where the family were sleeping. They got three gold watches, Mrs. Bryan's engagement ring, two pins and a quantity of silverware and money. When Mr. Bryan started to compute his losses he found his overcoat missing and a strange one on his rack. Investigating, he found in the strange coat the name "Edward H. Radel."

No clues have been discovered.

A SENIOR IN DISTRESS.

Floro Manillo of Habana Is in New York With Hip Pocket Perfectly Flat.

SENIOR Floro V. Manillo, the corner of whose card bears the address Habana, is in New York and in trouble. He is minus his revolver.

The senior had the gun when he arrived here several weeks ago and he carried it with him to a boarding house in West Sixty-first street. Then the senior became ill and went to a hospital. They wouldn't let him carry the revolver to the hospital out so he left it at the boarding house. The senior is well now and yesterday when he went to the place where he left the gun they told him that it wasn't there.

"Anyway, policemen and pawnbrokers are the only ones in this town who have any use for revolvers," said the man who met him at the door. "And if you had it you couldn't carry it without getting arrested."

The senior couldn't see it that way. For too many years in Cuba the pistol had been his close friend. But when the man at the door told him to get to hell out the senior was compelled to leave. He has friends, though, and they told him to go to Magistrate Walsh in West Fifty-fourth street.

He got a summons for the proprietor of the boarding house and he hopes tomorrow to get the gun.

OBITUARY.

Benjamin P. Davis, a veteran of the civil war and prominent in charitable, educational and business circles of Washington, died at his home, 519 West 122nd street, New York city, in his eighty-third year. He was born in Newburyport, Mass., studied for the ministry at Andover and taught school at Mount Auburn, Ohio, until the outbreak of the civil war, when he enlisted in the Commissary Department. In the battle of Gettysburg he served on the staff of Gen. Howard. After the close of hostilities he became disbursing officer of the Fourth Auditor's division, Treasury Department, and was appointed financial auditor by Gen. Grant. He was the first Cleveland administration, when he was prominent in the work of the Congressional Church and was the first president of the Congressional Club.

Joseph E. Sweeney, one of Building Superintendent Edward Murphy's inspectors of the local buildings, died on Thursday at his home, 115th street, of apoplexy after an illness of but a few days. He was born in this city about forty-five years ago and had been a master mason for twenty years, when upon the establishment of the new Department of Buildings Commissioner Thomas J. Brady appointed him an inspector. He served in the department continuously for twenty years.

Mrs. Kate Simonton Durrie, wife of Austin G. Durrie, died yesterday after a short illness at her home, 519 West 122nd street, New York city, in her eighty-third year. She was appointed a teacher in the Jersey City public schools on May 18, 1864, and served more than forty years. She taught in the New York schools before coming to Jersey City. She was the first principal of Jersey City's training school and for many years directed the instruction of graduates of the High School who desired to become teachers. She was principal of Primary School 5 when she retired in 1904.

William Hartz, publisher of Phillips Business Directory at 23 Nassau street, died Thursday afternoon at his home, 223 Hawthorne street, Flatbush, after an illness of four months. Mr. Hartz was born in London, England, in 1827, and came to New York about thirty years ago. He entered the employ of the Phillips concern twenty-seven years ago and three years ago purchased the publication. He leaves a wife and four children.

John Paul Jones, a prominent lawyer of Washington, died in that city yesterday at the age of 50 years. He was born in Greenfield, Mass., was educated at Georgetown University, studied law and practiced at Terce Haute until he came to Washington to become private secretary to Senator Sherman. He was a specialist in army and navy and Indian claims, in which he was very successful.

Marie Louise Dietz, wife of Frederick Dietz, president of the R. E. Dietz Company, died on Friday evening at her home, 312 West Twenty-sixth street, after a long illness. Mrs. Dietz was the youngest daughter of the late Jonathan E. Dick of Mount Vernon, N. Y. The latter was a great-grandson of President George Washington and was killed by the introduction of Methodism into America.

William Fisher of Brooklyn, who travelled for Libby, McNeil & Libby, died suddenly in Hartford Conn., yesterday, aged 50 years. He was well known among business men throughout New England. He was a member of Providence Lodge, U. C., and also belonged to a Brooklyn lodge of the same order.

ROME AGREES WITH THE POPE.

Tells Niece His Gout Is Better Than in Damp Air of Venice.

SPECIAL CABLE DISPATCH TO THE SUN.

ROME, Nov. 16.—The Pope received yesterday his niece, Gilda Parolin, who came from Rome, where she keeps a general shop, fearing that her uncle was not well. The Pope, who cherishes her among his other relatives, although he has never done anything to raise her from her humble station, entirely reassured his niece. He said he had never felt so well in his life.

The air of Rome, he said, seemed to be excellent for the gout, and his attacks here were less frequent and weaker than in Venice, where the dampness evidently contributed to aggravate the disease. The Pope added jokingly that the only thing he regretted was the impossibility of returning to Venice to see his friends, but he was happy to say that many of them came to see him in Rome.

SCHOOLSHIP PURPOSES.

Board of Education Again Explains That It's Not a Reformatory.

The Board of Education and Commander O. C. Hanna, late of the U. S. Navy, would be obliged if the public would kindly get over the idea that the schoolship St. Mary's and the school steamship Newport are sort of reformatories for unmanageable boys. The schoolships are nothing of the kind. No boy can get aboard without a certificate of character and he can't stay unless he obeys the rules. The school isn't run to conquer wayward youngsters. Its purpose is the training of boys to become officers of the merchant marine. The city runs the schoolships and supplies almost everything except clothing to such boys as are residents of the city and pass a satisfactory examination in elementary subjects. No boy under 16 years of age or over 20 is accepted.

About April 15 of each year a new term begins. The students rig the ship for the summer cruise and a month is spent in teaching them how to handle her. Then comes the annual cruise which, if along our coast, brings the vessel to New London, Boston, Portland and Bar Harbor, returning about the last of August. When making a foreign cruise she usually touches at some of the following ports: The Azores, Southampton, Cherbourg, Queenstown, Lisbon, Cadiz, Gibraltar and the Madeira Islands. The winter term begins about November 1 and ends on April 1 during which the ship is at her dock at the foot of East Twenty-fourth street.

STEEGERS GO OUT CROWDED.

Prosperous Overflow Into the Lusitania's Second Cabin.

The outrush of prosperous aliens who have been making their little pile in the mines and factories of the country was felt seriously by every line that had a steamship leaving port yesterday. The big and swift Cunard Lusitania had about 300 old country folk, mostly Irish and English, who could not get accommodation in the ships' steerage, which was filled to its capacity of about 1,000. Nearly fifty of those who didn't want to be left behind flashed rolls and said they would like to pay extra and go second cabin. That's the way they went. They were a well dressed and intelligent lot. Those who did not care about paying more than steerage rates were accommodated in the steerage of the Anchor liner Columbia, which stops at Moville, Ireland.

The Hamburg American liner President Grant, although she took away a record steerage load of 3,220, was forced to leave several hundred behind, who will have to wait until Thursday to get away. The North German Lloyd liner Koenigin Luise, bound for the Mediterranean, also was forced to make provision for the overflow of other line sailing later for several hundred Italians.

A YOUNG PAIR IN A HURRY.

Their Desire to Be Married Quickly Satisfied by a Speedy Jersey Justice.

A young man in automobile garb who said he was George Keister of 140 West Thirty-fourth street, Manhattan, hurried into the office of Justice of the Peace Bonest in Market street, New Jersey, yesterday afternoon and asked the J. P. if he'd marry him in a hurry. The J. P. said he would, and the young man hurried out to an auto to make provision for his bride. He was a young woman, also in automobile garb, and cap, and they were married as hurriedly as the J. P. knew how.

As they hurried out the young woman said she was Miss Lenora Hart of 232 Washington street, Hoboken. A reporter hurried to that address and found that Mr. Hart is one of the oldest clothing merchants in the city. Mr. Hart said he didn't know why his girl had got married in such a hurry. He said, he said, was a "maker of automobiles."

PUNISH THE INDIVIDUALS.

That Is Woodrow Wilson's Cure for the Oppression of Corporations.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 16.—Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton College, spoke on corporation oppression before the Chamber of Commerce here to-day. James Bryce, British Ambassador to the United States, and Gov. Curtis Guild of Massachusetts were the other speakers.

President Wilson declared the cure for the oppression of corporations was the singling out for punishment of the individual or groups of individuals whose control of each oppressive corporation was to blame. He declared a corporation had no soul, it had no mind, and must be punished through the individual only.

"The economic developments which have embarrassed us are of recent origin," he said, "and our chief trouble is that we don't know exactly what we are about. That is all. There are hopeful signs everywhere. Opinion everywhere prefers the process which is righteous, the man who is honest."

Ambassador Bryce insisted that no danger need be apprehended from immigration, declaring that education was the cure for its attendant evils as well as for all material evils of the day.

Gov. Guild criticized the rich who, he charged, played golf or were in Europe on election day and shirked their duty.

Farragut Fleet Veterans.

The New York members of the Associated Veterans of the Farragut Fleet, who fought in the Mobile campaign with Farragut at a meeting held on Tuesday in the Criminal Courts Building decided to take measures to keep alive the memory of the Admiral in the future by attending services at his grave in Woodlawn Cemetery on Memorial Day. There are nearly 500 members of the association. They are scattered all over the country. At the meeting on Tuesday the New York members chose as their officers Henry J. Kearney, commander; Francis H. Grove, vice-commander; P. H. Flynn, treasurer; E. A. Goodell, secretary, and Edward Coppens, chairman of the nominating committee. Letters of regret were read from many officers of the navy. The next meeting is to be held on Washington's Birthday.
